

I writing this comment in the hopes that the FCC should not implement any proposal that would lessen Indiana's Telephone Privacy law protections. Indiana's Telephone Privacy law has improved my time at home. I used to receive 5 or more calls a day, some were even for a family who had our number before so telemarketers were calling our house for them, we were getting double the telemarketing calls and they just would not stop! Since adding our name to the list of those included on Indiana's telephone privacy list we have only received one call, in 6 months. Since my husband has swing shift hours it has greatly increased his health due to he can sleep uninterrupted by unknown people calling our home without our consent. To let these people to again bombard people in their own homes would be as bad as having ten door to door salesmen come to your home every day. Can you imagine? Please take into consideration the lengths Indiana has gone to assure their residents are more comfortable and peaceful in their homes because of the decrease in unwanted calls when you are considering rules for this law. Accept nothing less than what we have here in the Hoosier state. Thank you for your time.
